Maliatma Gandhi, the little man of fame in India.

When Mahatma was a little boy his father died. His mother, a Hindu saint and vitally interested in her son's future, planned his education for the bar. He was married when very young, according to the custom of his people, and sent alone to London to complete his education.

Just before his return to India he received a message of his mother's death. The first years as a native lawyer in India were very discouraging. However, a call from South Africa to conduct a case for one of his countrymen was a turning point in his life. He became very successful at the bar and amassed a fortune. It was then he looked upon the people of his home land with pity and deep concern. His life from henceforth was dedicated to that great lower caste of the Hindu people.

The caste system in India is marked and unsolved. Into these castes you are born and there you are fast for life, born on a farm then your lot is cast among farmers, you have no place with merchants, they are of another caste, etc. India is over-run with poor folk, thousands of gypsy-like folk, nomads, wanderers, tramps, thieves and the like. These millions of natives are of the low caste, commonly known as untouchables, meaning beneath the educated, and rich. The high caste, the prosperous, shun them, bar them from any contact, social, business or otherwise.

If an untouchable seeks existence by making and selling toys, the high caste would be defiled by buying from them.

Now Mahatma Gandhi seeks to better the condition of these millions of India. His task is extremely difficult, for every other caste is against him. This causes disturbances, then he is imprisoned by the English government.

Gandhi is not a Christian, neither is he orthodox to the Hindu scriptures. I quote from his writing, "Personally I do not regard any of the world's religions as false. All serve to enrich mankind." Again Gandhi says, "You speak of giving Jesus a place in your heart. No man, says he, can give a greater man than himself a place, that place is his by right." Gandhi says, "You do not give the wife of your heart a place. No, no, that place in the affections is heres."
