THE GANG

The definition of which is a group of people banded together for a particular purpose.

Life everywhere is hung together pretty much by gangs. More polite names may be in vogue, nevertheless, they are gangs. There is the rich man's gang, perhaps they call it a club. There is the labor gang, they call it a union. There is the elite gang, they call it society. There is the devout gang, they call it a church. Every brand and breed of human beings in every land line up and may be classified as gangs.

In our great cities it is the gangs of thieves, of outlaws or of toughs that prey upon and menace all other gangs like one herd of animals feed upon another herd or flock or species. Not far from the animal are we, even the animal undomesticated.

Now, gangs well organized and regulated will accomplish wonderful feats. Gangs built our railroads, our great arteries of traffic, our telegraph lines. Gangs, yes, they built our homes, our stores, our cities. The carpenter gang, the plumber gang, the paint gang, the roofing gang, they work in gangs, we live in gangs. It's handy, it's convenient, this idea of team work and team life is one of absolute necessity.

So we gang together in a high order called the church. Even the church has its shifts, its personnel, its groups or its gangs. If the construction gang and the riveting gang and the floor gang build the bridge, even so, does the ladies guild and the Bible school and the young peoples society build the church.

In the letter to the Corinthians we read, We are labourers together with God. Ye are God's building. Again in chapter twelve, For the body is not one member, but many, namely, the eye for sight, ear for hearing, nose for smelling, the foot for conveying, hand for toil, this is an anatomy gang, which, when organized and operating glories its Maker and leaves foot-prints on the sands of eternity.

Let us learn a lesson from this common-place word gangs. If the ants and bees together with hundreds of other species of organized life cooperating in bands, wonderfully united and plodding along with astonishing diligence, pursuant to the laws of instinct and destiny, then we too in gangs, or bands, or groups, or by any other label may work out the wonder plan, that was from the beginning, for every soul to fear God, keep His commandments and enjoy Him forever.
