GETTING THE MOST OUT OF LIFE

Why not? Why not get the most out of life? The game of life should be interesting, the goal of life should be all absorbing. One should enjoy life, something is terribly wrong if we just endure life. But one will say, if I had money I could command life's good things. Another will say, if I had attainments, five talents instead of one, I would feel that I were one of the chosen of the race, or again, if I were free of some handicap that has well-nigh ridden me to death, then, yes then, I would live and enjoy life.

Getting the most out of life is never attained by a dream of swapping my lot for another's, neither is it given to them who race up and down the earth in a mad frenzy to find the hidden treasure.

You get the most out of life by knowing and disciplining yourself, by having some worthy object or hobby or achievement to live and strive for. You win by an unerring faith in yourself and a constant trust in spiritual values. This has always been true and always will be true. It is founded on unerring laws, laws beyond the fixing of man. So why not get the most out of life?

Sit down on the old door-step, take an inventory of things just as they are, then swell up with pride that you live and that you are a part of a mighty plan so wonderful that you cannot understand, you accept it by faith.

Don't abuse yourself, don't trifle, don't sin, don't dishonor your Maker, don't drift, or rebel or resolve to endure as dumb and driven cattle.

The one who gets the most out of life treats life seriously, he pulls himself up as high as he can and he lifts everyone that he can with him, his life is unselfish, he finds joy in service, he has faith in the ultimate outcome of the human race, he complains, whimpers not at the up-hill way he finds life by giving of his best to the weak and needy.

A few hours ago I spoke with a man who said to me, I am glad that most of my life has been lived, it's gone, there's not much left. In the words of Jacob of old, Few and evil have the days and years of my life been. My eye followed him sorrowfully, his evening was here, his day about done and he no doubt would be thankful for the rest of the coffin and the peace of the grave.

There are multitudes like him. So why not get the most out of life?

It's not money or position or talent that makes life worthwhile. The laborer who sweats and toils in the harvest field may have the same hope, joy and magnanimity of soul and heart and mind as the rich, the mighty or the one of many talents.

Look to yourself, see how you may improve your own soul and mind and body. Do good to others, trust God and you will be getting infinitely more out of life.

Anyone who says our young folks do not have talent know not whereof they speak. Miss Clara Gillam is right there when it comes to being a "sob sister." Howard Sanner makes an excellent Indian, and—but we will stop right here, for they were all good. The only regrettable feature—the crowd was not big enough. Should have been at least a thousand there.

POEM
I am a place where God shines through For He and I are one, not two
He needs me where and as I am
I need not fret, nor will, nor plan
If I just keep released and free
He'll carry out His plan for me.

there was time to squeeze in nine of these events besides the usual accompanying song services, three meals and three hours of last meeting closed. During the six days we took nearly enough notes to write a book but after spending approximately an hour in working over about half of the first sermon it was given up as a job which would require too much time. A great deal of what you may read in this week’s paper consists of disconnected quota-

The editor of this paper is glad for the opportunity of reading the splendid, inspirational sermon on the Bible School Lesson written by Rev. L. M. Gregory for the Christian Standard of July 2, a copy of which was sent to us last week. The Christian Standard is a paper widely read over the country, and this article will, no doubt, be read and appreciated by many. In fact, while at Winona Lake last week we heard favorable comments on the presentation by Rev. Gregory.
