ASHAMED OF CIVILIZATION

The Daily Press chronicles the news of the day, how sordid, how horrifying. Art, truth, forgiveness, peace, advancement of the church and home, and lastly, the inner urge, called the spirit of life, are well-nigh forsaken or rejected to give way to greed, to the glory of war, to baser passions of the race.

I bow in humiliation, I cover my head with shame, I cry aloud, but alas, the only answer is the echo of my pitiful cry. I have expected nobler things of the children of men. Perhaps, sometime, somewhere, man, made in the image of God will find himself, will make a glorious discovery, a discovery that he is his brother's keeper, that all humanity everywhere must be one great, kind and loving family, this and this only if civilization would save itself from destruction.

In the year 1478 a male child was born in England, when christened his name was Sir Thomas More. More became one of the most profound scholars of his day. He became a member of Parliament when he was twenty-five years of age, he was known as the beardless boy. He was elected Speaker of the House of Commons, he was one of the three select advisers of the King, he was one of the outstanding lawyers of Great Britain.

It was Sir Thomas More that wrote the little classic, Utopia. Utopia was written by Sir Thomas in Latin. It was intended for the King, for the learned, for cultured folk. More, a keen and mighty thinker, saw and exposed the weakness of human society, he saw how humanity might destroy itself. So More wrote of a visionary order of state. His Utopia was something akin to Plato's Republic or the practices of the early Christians. It was a dream, a hope, a prayer that this poor, stupid, greedy civilization might be just and honorable in dealing with their fellow men.

That ray of light coming from a human soul in or about the year 1515 has been eclipsed by strife and brutality, by smoke of battles and the merciless scramble of the human race. Crucify him, cried the throng in the year 33. So the fairest flower of the human race gave up his life.

In the year 1535 Sir Thomas More was fifty-seven years of age. No man in England, before or since, has ever outlined a more beautiful program for the comfort and happiness of all the people than he. However, in the year mentioned, More used his mighty influence against divorce and corrupt legislation. So the King said, let him die. Therefore, he went to his execution, to the everlasting shame of the English people in the year 1535.

Ashamed of civilization, yes, I am, for civilization has mighty possibilities, it has unfolded a progress and development that staggers the human mind. Yet,
We Openly Advise...

you to make good judgment count more than an exorbitant expenditure of money.
