CONTRIBUTIONS OF THE INDIANS

The poor Red Man of the forest has gone to his long home, his dream of a happy hunting ground we trust has unfolded for him, as we hope our dream of Heaven will come true.

Think of the legacy the American Indian has bequeathed to the world. No savage tribe ever has or ever can give to humanity what the deposed Red Man has given civilization. This aboriginal savage, this native of America, this dweller of the prairies and the hills, this lord of the lakes and king of the rivers gave, not without a struggle, nevertheless, he gave to the white man, America.

A more formidable warrior never lived on earth than the American Indian, he spurned civilization. In words we could not understand, many hundreds of years ago, the true native American sang, something like, "I love thy rocks and rills, thy native templed hills, My heart with rapture thrills like that above."

From the Indian came your lot, your farm, your home land. This not so long ago was his hunting ground, the place where he staked his tepee. He owned the land, the rivers, the lakes, his, from ocean to ocean. No man knows how many centuries rolled by while the Indian held fast his claim and no foreign foe to molest him. No people have ever known such a promise land as America was to the Indian. But he gave it to the white man. America, the Indian's contribution to civilization. Columbus made a second voyage to America in quest of gold. He returned to Spain in great disappointment and was cast into prison for debt. However, he carried on his return voyage to Spain a number of black balls that the Indian boys batted to and fro in their play. These black balls were made from the hardened juice of a tree of Haiti, it was rubber. The boys of Spain were delighted to have the rubber balls that Columbus brought home, they bounced them about until they were done for.

One hundred years rolled by before the gumming juice of the rubber tree was treated seriously. All the advancements in rubber that have revolutionized civilization dates to the Indian boys who cooled the sap and rolled it round and organized the game called ball.

Not only did the Indian give to civilization rubber, he taught the world the game of ball. Two or two hundred Indians could play the game of ball. Their plan was one or many on each side. The ball was batted by a short paddle, a goal was erected through which the ball must pass, one side opposing the other and the ball being kept in the air continually until a goal was scored.

And who gave tobacco to the race? The Indian did. He never made cigarettes, he did not chew, he smoked a long pipe. Better, however, the Indian gave us corn. Yes, sir, the Indian corn came from the American Indian. Don't forget when you eat the luscious roasting ear, or fatten pork, corn was a great dish for the Red Man.

My space for this article is about occupied, so one more item, when you eat cake, or dish of ice cream and smack your lips and exclaim, “what a delicious flavor, why, it is vanilla,” vanilla, too, was discovered and used first by the American Indian for much the same purpose that we use it today.

In our Bible School lesson Sunday we read “Thou shalt not take the name of the Lord thy God in vain; for the Lord will not hold him guiltless that taketh his name in vain.” Man! How many men do you know who keep this commandment? Personally our respect goes down several points for anyone whom we hear take the name of God in vain. You can’t be a true Christian and take the name of God in vain.
